

WHAT SHAT THAT?

A POCKET GUIDE TO POOP IDENTITY

BY MATT PAGETT

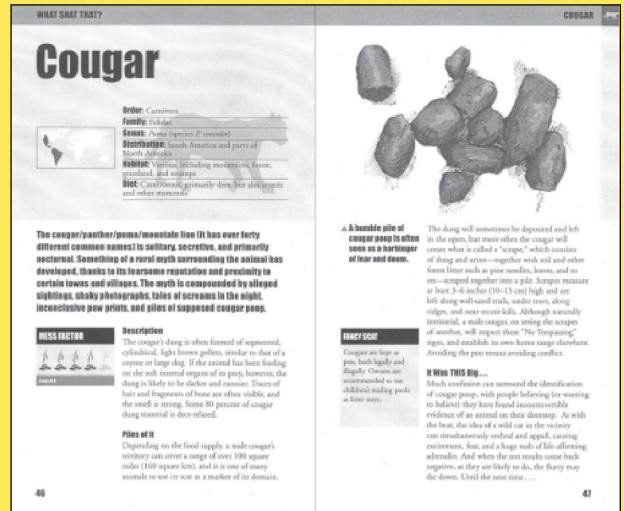

MOOSE POOP IS HARD TO AVOID IN ALASKAN SOUVENIR SHOPS. GAZELLE CRAP WAS used as a hair tonic in ancient Egypt. South American giant otters will use a communal latrine. Aardvarks bury their droppings to fertilize their favorite fruit. Aphid poo's called "honeydew," which ants love to sip. A dung beetle's own feces isn't all that interesting. And at 0.000007874 inches, plankton turds are the smallest in the world.

Pocket-sized, informative, and entertaining, What Shat That? brings excitement to excrement with 112 jam-packed pages of poo in all its smelly splendor. Each page spread includes a common animal with a map and information on everything from its scientific name to its habitat and diet. Also featured are full-color photos and illustrations for easy identification, descriptions and commentary, as well as a "Mess Factor" rating (lions are the nastiest, scoring 5 out of 5, while the modest termite gets a 1).

But seriously, folks... What Shat That? is a practical guidebook as well, inspiring a curiosity and love of nature in the young and old alike. Hunters, hikers, and outdoor adventurers will enjoy the ridiculous-but-true factual trivia and the precise, lovingly drawn illustrations. Aficionados of the absurd will love it too, for pretty much the same reason. And value shoppers will appreciate the good price and the publisher's guarantee: no bullshit, except on pages twelve and thirteen.

MATT PAGETT is an artist, illustrator, and writer based in Brighton, England. A graduate of Edinburgh University, he has worked on a number of books, including Household Management for Men, Make Your Own Sex Toys, The Campsite Companion, and 101 Golden Rules of Fishing. Matt, whose artwork has been exhibited internationally, is available for interview.
